OUR ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS OPEN FOR NEW SCHOOL YEAR

Last Monday the elementary schools opened for the new school year with increased registration in every locality of the district, and especially so in the primary grades of the General Pershing school.

The greatest enthusiasm prevailed everywhere. Every child was really glad vacation was over and that he or she could go to school and do something once more.

The registering of the children, the moving from one grade to another, and the assigning of seats were accomplished within an hour and without the least excitement, all due to reasonable organization on the part of each teacher. Before noon of the first day every room-full of children had settled down to actual work, and there was no early dismissal of classes in the afternoon, as the desire to do something prevailed so strongly.

The teachers who managed the opening so well know that the children return to school filled with the ambition to study, to obey, and to be polite. On every side there were evidences of studiousness, obedience and politeness. All that was necessary was to supply the incentives and the children did the rest with the greatest willingness.

So will be the work of every day of the year under the wise direction of the resourceful teacher. But when there is a lack of provision for sensible employment for the young learners, then studiousness, obedience, and politeness fade away and heedlessness, disobedience, and disrespect take their place. Be assured, at the beginning, that the teacher is responsible for the condition of her room, nearly always.

Success as a teacher is never accidental. It comes as a reward for patient, unremitting application to duty. The District Superintendent says to every teacher frequently, using a thought of Patrick Henry's slightly changed, "Eternal vigilance is the price of success." Following this thought the teacher is ever alert, ready for any emergency, nipping evil in the bud, and does not fail to see the first scratch on a desk, not to mention the pocket-knife's awful work.

Neglecting to follow this thought, through general inefficiency, or foolish obsession, disorder gradually but surely takes full possession, work ceases, there is no advancement, the furniture is mutilated, and yet such a teacher expects to be paid despite the ruin wrought by her woeful lack of ability to meet the demands of the position.

During the vacation the Trustees have found considerable pleasure in directing various repairs and much appreciated improvements. The desks in several rooms have been refinished by Fred Michelsen, and he made them look like new ones. Tattered and worn shades have been replaced. Soiled walls have been retouched. Bothersome doors have been remedied. Blackboards have been reslated. All the floors have been scrubbed and freshly oiled, and every window is clean.

At the Jefferson school, Colma, the old fence and hedge that stood the wear and tear of the elements for the past thirty-four years was deemed a fire menace and had to be removed. It was worthwhile to see the county caterpillar pulling out the trees, roots and all.

A new, modern wire fence, upon a cement foundation, will soon be erected to replace that which had served so long.

All the repairs and improvements made everything look fresh and inviting for the opening. Much credit is due to the Trustees for their interest in having this work done at the right time.

REWARD FAITHFUL PUBLIC SERVANTS

In only a few days now the men and women of San Mateo county will have the opportunity to reward their faithful servants who are holding public office at the present time. So important is the occasion it is by no means too early to prepare for the visit to the polling booth.

The time consumed in performing the duty of voting is negligible but with far-reaching consequences. The duty carried out in the intelligent manner possible, insures good government. We have had the best of government under the present administrators and should keep it at that enviable height.

The editor of the Daly City Record has come out for the incumbents, as all of our rapidly increasing circle of readers are aware. A careful study of the situation demonstrated to our utmost satisfaction that we should return not one, or several, or half a dozen, but every office holder to his position. The incumbents have made good, and danger lurks in trying to find their equals among other candidates.

Voting is both a privilege and a duty. With such officials as those of our county doing their tasks as they should be done, it is good fortune indeed to be able to pay them the slight token of our appreciation in casting our ballots for them. The duty is imposed by our democratic form of government. We have deeply cherished plans for the upbuilding of the community, and with the good work well on its way we should do nothing to retard the movement.

Efficiency is the slogan of the age, and we look for it in county affairs as well as in state and national business. Fortunately for us, we not only have efficiency, but that humane quality, courtesy, as well. We can truly say observations extending over a long period have convinced us that the pride we feel in our county force has the most solid of foundations.

Many are running for office and asking for our suffrages. The best—the ones we are sanguine will roll up tremendous majorities—are the incumbents.

DALY CITY RESIDENTS ARE 'IN THE MOVIES'

The reopening of the Daly City Theatre on Thursday evening of last week was marked by a satisfactory attendance, and many were the expressions of surprise and gratification at the improvements made during the time the theatre had been closed to the public.

Motion pictures were taken of the assembling patrons, and these pictures will be shown on next Tuesday and Wednesday. A good chance to see yourself "in the movies."

The Daly City Theatre, now being operated by the Golden State Theatre Circuit, under the capable management of Mr. G. F. Covel, has been enlarged by the installation of a balcony, and other noticeable improvements made, and is now in a class by itself in a community of this size.

The former patrons of this popular playhouse were particularly impressed with the improvements made during the temporary suspension of business, and feel now that residents of this section have an amusement place of which they may always be proud.

The programs being presented by Manager Covel are all that could be desired, and with a continuance of this policy of presenting worth-while pictures, there is every assurance that the Daly City Theatre will become one of the most popular amusement places on the peninsula.

CAR HITS TRAILER TWO ARE INJURED

Alpheus McGovern, aged 23, was seriously injured last Friday night when the automobile in which he was riding with E. E. Bramble, of the South San Francisco Enterprise, crashed into a parked trailer on the Bayshore highway near Visitacion.

Mr. Bramble, who was driving, declared that blinding lights from a billboard had prevented his seeing the parked trailer in time to prevent the crash.

Mr. McGovern, son of Dr. J. C. McGovern, county coroner, suffered a fractured hip and numerous cuts and bruises. He was taken to the South San Francisco hospital, and it is believed it will be months before he fully recovers.

Mr. Bramble escaped with cuts and bruises and was released from the hospital after treatment. The billboard on the right side of the road as Mr. Bramble drove toward it was illuminated by a new type of glaring electric light, which prevented him from seeing the trailer, he declared.

PLUMBING MEASURE BEFORE CITY COUNCIL

A regular meeting of the City Council was held last Monday night, Mayor H. H. Smith presiding, and all members being present except Councilman Bodien, who was attending the Eagles' convention in San Francisco.

A communication was received from the Board of Fire Commissioners, recommending that the sum of $20 be paid to Fireman V. Savelly for his expenses while attending the State Firemen's convention in San Francisco. Mr. Savelly was the alternate delegate, acting in place of Delegate Chief J. J. Kennedy. The recommendation was complied with.

A communication was received from W. E. Brown, of the firm of Mark A. McCann, asking for permission to install a garden golf club in Daly City. The request was referred to the building inspector for recommendation.

The ordinance committee reported progress on the new plumbing ordinance, stating that the ordinance is now in the hands of the City Attorney, and will be ready for first reading at the next regular meeting.

The library committee reported that last month was a record month, 3,152 books being distributed.

A communication was received from the health officer, recommending the condemnation of the property known as the Palm Villa, Santa Cruz and Hillcrest Drive. This property is considered unfit and unsafe for occupancy. This matter was referred to the chief of police, to go ahead and take the necessary steps.

DALY CITY K. OF C. ENTERTAINS LADIES

Following their regular meeting on Tuesday evening, August 5, members of Daly City, Council, Knights of Columbus, entertained their wives, children and friends. The evening was set aside as ladies' night, and a good attendance of Daly City folk and visitors enjoyed Daly City Council's hospitality.

Five acts of peppy vaudeville kept the audience well interested. A buffet luncheon was served, after which the evening was given over to dancing.

Final plans for the Council's grand picnic at Lovchen Gardens, Colma, on Sunday, August 24, will be completed at the next regular meeting on Tuesday evening, August 19. W. L. M.

JEFFERSON HIGH HAS 325 PUPILS

The new term at Jefferson Union high school, which opened on Monday last, began with the highest enrollment in the school's history, three hundred and twenty-five, ninety-three of whom are new pupils. At no previous opening has the registration reached the three hundred mark. Many of the classes were overcrowded, including auto mechanics, typewriting, history, civics and Spanish. In some cases as many as sixty or seventy sought enrollment in rooms with seats for only forty. But by transfers of students from one period to another all were given permanent seats. Only in the auto mechanics department were there more than could be accommodated.

Principal James Ferguson expressed his delight at the promptness with which the students came to school on the opening day. Never in his experience of twenty-five years did he ever see greater promptness, he said. And he predicted that with such a spirit Jefferson High school should make a new high record for study and scholarship.

Three new teachers are on the faculty this year. Miss Beauel Gibbins will be in charge of the library, Miss Helen Fake will teach shorthand, typewriting and commercial law, and Miss Helen Burfield will teach advanced English, Journalism and Music.

Coach Biaggini had his boys out on the football field several evenings, looking over his material for the different positions on the team.

EVENING SCHOOL TO OPEN ON AUGUST 19

The Evening school of Jefferson Union high school will open on next Tuesday, August 19, at 7 o'clock. The sessions will be on Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 7 to 9.

The courses to be offered are Automobile Mechanics, to be given by Mr. Hackley, in the new Auto Mechanics building. This department is furnished with the most modern equipment available.

Americanization will be given by Mrs. Milani. This course is offered to enable the foreign born to get their citizenship papers and learn to speak, read, and write English.

Bookkeeping and typing will be taught by Miss Robinson. Here you may begin either or both subjects or you may continue with work you have started in some other institution. You can brush up on either typing or bookkeeping or if temporarily out of employment you can keep your mind and fingers nimble by attending school twice a week.

Principal James Ferguson announces that other courses will be added to the work of the Evening School just as quickly as the need is shown. He urges every adult who desires to fit himself for a better position to register at the High school next Tuesday evening.

PARTY IN CELBRATION OF SECOND ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. Gus Ford, of Parkview avenue, gave a birthday dinner last Sunday at their home in honor of their little daughter Barbara on her second birthday. The honored guest received many lovely gifts. A most delightful time was had by the guests, among whom were the following: Mr. and Mrs. R. Stockton, Mr. and Mrs. F. Ferro, Mr. and Mrs. Gus Ford, Mr. and Mrs. J. Gowlin, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Fell, Miss Henrietta Nieber, Miss Barbara Ford, Master Jackie Ford, Mr. George Ford, Mr. Henry Thomas.

MERCHANTS WIN THIRD STRAIGHT

The Daly City Merchants scored their third straight upset in local semi-pro baseball last Sunday, defeating the highly rated Levy & Zenter nine, 5 to 2, at Jackson Park.

This contest marked the local nine's fourth victory since they started booking games away from home five weeks ago, and their eleventh win in seventeeen starts.

Gene Keagle turned in another sparkling performance to keep his pitching record clean. He allowed the produce nine only six hits and struck out eight batters.

Since the first game Keagle pitched for Daly City, the local hitters have been very weak at bat. Sunday's contest was no exception. The Daly City players collected only five hits off Barrows and Wanrke, the opposing twirlers. Pat Sloan accounted for two safeties, both doubles, to lead the attack.

The local nine did not indulge in any useless preliminaries, taking a one run lead in the initial frame. Rettig obtained a base on balls and scored on Sloan's double to center. This was the only earned run of the game.

Five free passes to first base, coupled with an infield error, netted the Merchants another pair of tallies in the second inning. Barrows walked three batters and hit two with pitched balls before he was removed in favor of Warnke. Al Cohen, Zenter manager, might just as well have allowed him to continue, as the damage was already done.

With this three run lead, Keagle was almost invincible. He appeared a little nervous in the seventh frame, but finished strong, allowing nary a hit in the final innings. Many spectators' predictions were upset by his cool-headed exhibition.

A total of nine errors were chalked up in this contest. The Zenter tossers were charged with six boots and Daly City with three. Seven of the total were poor throws.

The services of Marcus Evenson and Al Toole were missed greatly. Evenson is in the hospital with intestinal trouble, and Toole had to quit. Both young men have displayed the best of spirit and ability. They will have a berth awaiting them when they desire to come back.

The Merchants have won a great reputation by defeating four of the best teams in the city. It is no trouble for Cavagnaro to book any opponent he wants. Another close game can be expected next Sunday, when Daly City plays the Blum Sweets nine on a city diamond. Don't miss it.

WATCHMAN TAKEN FOR RIDE, ROBBED LEFT IN BOX CAR

Edward Yates, residing at 34 Prospect street, San Francisco, employed as night watchman on sewers under construction at Tenth and Harrison streets, was abducted last Sunday night at 11:45, and taken for a wild ride by two men, one about 19 years old, and the other about 35 years of age.

Yates' abductors placed him in his own machine and took him out Mission street, down Los Banos avenue, after having gagged him and bound his hands with shoe laces, and then robbed him.

While he was helpless, they put him in a box car on the southern Pacific switch. They then left in Yates' machine. They were gone but a few minutes, however, when they returned to the box car, evidently feeling sorry for Yates, and opened one of the doors to let him have some fresh air, telling him they did not wish him to suffocate.

After some time Yates managed to get the gag out of his mouth and to wiggle his hands free, when he came to Mission street and reported the incident to Officer Hilton of the Daly City police department.

It is hoped Yates' assailants will be captured, as he was able to give a fairly good description of them.

WILL SPEED WORK ON THE BAYSHORE

Speeding of work on the new Bayshore highway link from Redwood City to Willow road, Menlo Park, has been promised by officials of the State Highway Commission. Calling of bids was announced from Sacramento in news dispatches given publication on Tuesday.

Work will be rushed on the new link of 4.1 miles and also on the paving of the Bayshore highway from Burlingame to South San Francisco, with no blocking of traffic from the latter project, it was promised.

Crews are preparing shoulders over which traffic will be routed on the Burlingame-South San Francisco link during the pouring of concrete. Supervisor Thomas L. Hickey, of South San Francisco, has added his promise to that of state officials with a declaration that traffic will not be stopped for the $400,000 paving work.

Bids on the new link, which will complete the highway through San Mateo county are to be opened September 3. It is expected that work on grading and filling will be under way by October. No estimate of the time required to complete the new roadway was forthcoming.

Willow road, passing the United States Veterans' hospital, Menlo Park, will be extended to connect with the Dumbarton bridge, and a subway crossing will be installed at tracks of the Southern Pacific railroad, it was stated by officials.

With completion of the new link, which will join the nearly completed highway from Redwood City to the junction at Fifth avenue, San Mateo, motorists will have a direct route to Santa Clara county without using El Camino Real or the Skyline boulevard. This will do away with traffic jams resulting from throngs driving down the peninsula on holidays, traffic officials pointed out.

BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION

Mr. and Mrs. A. Barskey, of Santa Barbara avenue, entertained in honor of Mrs. Barskey's sister Virginia Rodgers, who celebrated her first birthday last Monday. Little Virginia received many lovely gifts. Most delicious refreshments, which included home made ice cream and cake, were served by the hostess. After partaking of these refreshments, the guests attended the Daly City Theatre. The guest sincluded Rose, Gertrude, Maxine, Shirley and Ruth Atkins, Marion and Ernest Foss, Carl and Myrtle Smith, Phil Rogers, Andrew Barskey, Stanley Barskey, Miss Zelda Barskey, Mr. and Mrs. J. Barskey, Mr. and Mrs. A. Barskey.

The Original "Covered Wagon"

Conestoga Wagon —from a painting by F.O.C. Darley, 1874

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

COVERED WAGON CENTENNIAL, which is being celebrated at various places along the route of the Old Oregon Trail this year, has again focused public attention upon a type of vehicle which once traversed that historic highway and has served to fix more firmly in the minds of most Americans the prairie schooner as the one outstanding symbol of that epic migration which won the trans-Mississippi West. Appropriate though the prairie schooner may be as symbol of that era in our history, it was not the original covered wagon.

That distinction belongs to another vehicle which antedated the prairie schooner by at least a century, but which, like its successor, played an important role in the westward march of the American people even though it did it amid the rich rolling farmlands, the fertile valleys and the wooded slopes of the Appalachians in the East rather than across the broad plains of the Great West. For the Conestoga wagon of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, was the "original covered wagon," even though that name "Conestoga wagon" means nothing to thousands of Americans in whose minds a very definite picture forms when you speak the words "prairie schooner."

One hundred years ago wagoning was at its height and on the Conestoga trail—the road from Philadephia to Pittsburgh, which was the gateway to the Ohio country—were fleets of great white-topped wagons. There were said to be three thousand daily, on this road alone. Some carried six or eight-ton loads of provisions and necessaries for the western country, and 'back loaded' with furs and skins, flour and wheat, from the West for the eastern markets. Others carried families, who were going to the new country to make it their homes, and all of their household goods. Of contemporary records of all this activity there are few, and no stress is laid upon the wagons or their heavy six-horse bell teams. They were so much a part of every day that they are simply taken for granted. Historians who wrote just after their era was past mention them only casually—they were still such a commonplace, as idigenous to the Pennsylvania countryside as its farms and orchards, or its hills themselves.

Today a Conestoga wagon is a rarity, even in the land of its origin. Tomorrow it will be found only in museums. But fortunately for all those who cherish the tradition of things typically and essentially American, the Conestoga wagon has had its historian who has collected in one volume all the available information about this instrument of empire building before it was too late. He is John Omwake, now a resident of Cincinnati.

When John Omwake was a boy in Pennsylvania, his uncle, Wesley Koons, operated a big farm near Greencastle in Franklin county in the Cumberland valley. After the Civil war he was one of the few who kept their Conestoga bell teams to be brought to town on election day and on other public occasions. One of young Omwake's ambitions was to some day own and drive as "fine a team as Uncle Wesley Koons'" That boyhood wish was never fulfilled but the next best thing was to write a book about this unique bit of Pennsylvania's early life and the result was the book, "The Conestoga Six-Horse Bell Teams of Eastern Pennsylvania, 1750-1850," which Mr. Omwake recently printed for private distribution.

In the preface to his book Mr. Omwake says, "To most of us today a Conestoga wagon means rather vaguely just any covered wagon. But it wasn't. The Conestoga wagon was a perfect vehicle for existing conditions and the highest type of a commodious freight carrier that has ever been known. It started as a farm wagon and grew with the country. It rumbled farther and farther from its home farm—to the mill, to the market, and beneath its ponderous wheels trails widened and became roads; fords became ferries and then bridges, horizons broadened and the Conestoga wagon was the carrier between the East and the West whose need George Washington had foreseen."

Although the first of these vehicles were modified English covered farm wagons, which came into use in New England and other places on the Atlantic seaboard early in the colonial days, local conditions in Pennsylvania—notably the greater distances between the producer and his market, which made it essential that the Pennsylvania farm wagon hold twice as much as the New England farm wagon, where distances were shorter, hence the sturdier built and heavier wagon requiring from four to eight horses to pull it—quickly resulted in the development of a distinctive type of wagon for this region.

Gradually the excellence of the wagons made by the wheelwrights of the Conestoga valley of Lancaster county caused them to become famous throughout the country and "Conestoga wagon" became a sort of trademark for this type of freight carrier. They differed from the English wagons from which they sprang in that the bed was longer and deeper and had considerable sag in the middle, both lengthwise and crosswise. There was a very good reason for this. If, while the wagon was pursuing its way over some rough trail or down a steep mountainside, the load would shift, settle toward the center and not throw its bulk against the endgates. Unlike the bows, which held the white cover of the English wagon, which were vertical, the bows of the Conestoga followed the line of the ends of the body and slanted outward, thus keeping out rain and dust. The whole appearance of the Conestoga was that of a boat and, as Mr. Omwake says, "It is easy to see why this wagon should have been called the Ship of Inland Commerce, as it cruised with its great white top between the green Pennsylvania hills."

"Even had it not been for its striking contour," he continues, "the Conestoga wagon would have been imposing because of its sheer bulk. The top of the front hoop was eleven feet from the ground. The white homespun cover was two dozen feet long. The top ends of the wagon bed were sixteen feet apart and the rear wheels five or six feet high. When the six-horse team was pulling, the team and wagon stretched to sixty feet.

"The wagoner was selected because of his ability and dependability and when anyone interfered with his charge he knew how to defend his rights. . . . There were many things to quarrel about and the wagoner in the popular mind became a dashing daredevil who was to the Pennsylvania countryside what the cowboy was to the West."

These great wagons which carried such large loads of freight, required sturdy horses to draw them and gradually there evolved a breed of draught animals known as Conestoga horses which were as distinctive as the wagons themselves. They were the product of English or Flemish draught horses and Virginia mares and were a race of large, patient animals with short, arched necks, full manes, good legs, sleek round bodies and weighing around fourteen hundred pounds or more.

Just as the Conestoga wagons and horses were distinctive, so were the various pieces of equipment which helped to make up the whole freighting outfit. The most striking of these were the bells which gave the name of "six-horse bell teams." At first these bells were very necessary for the roads were narrow and winding and it was desirable that other traffic be given warning of the approach of one of these heavy outfits. But later these bells survived as a sort of a trademark. They varied in size, number, shape and arrangement but the early day traveler on a Pennsylvania road could not mistake the sound of their tinkling approach.

Then there were distinctive features in the tool boxes, the feed boxes, the tar buckets and a dozen other things. The iron work on these wagons was especially interesting, revealing as it did the artistic aspirations of the blacksmiths who collaborated with wheelwrights in making the Conestoga wagons. Usually the blacksmith put somewhere on the wagon the date in iron and the figure one, as it invariably appeared on the Conestoga wagon and nowhere else, is interesting. It is a double I crossed and, according to Mr. Omwake, it means "Jahr Herr Jesu" or "the year of our Lord Jesus."

Then there were other details which gave to the wagon a picturesque and impressive appearance. "Its wheels and removable sideboards were painted a bright vermilion, while the running gear was a soft blue and white cover gleamed in the sunshine—a brave sight cruising between the green fields and the wooded hills.

"I think the painting of the Conestoga wagons was the result of conditions, rather than any esthetic preference, although the Amish today have a decided liking for light blue, pink and cherry red.

The Conestoga wagon came into existence just in time to have a part in making American history. As early as 1745 Benjamin Franklin was issuing a broadside urging wagoners to enlist with their wagons and teams in the king's service against the French and Indians. Ten years later when General Braddock set out upon his ill-fated expedition it was very necessary that he have adequate transport for his provisions during his march into the wilderness. Securing this was only one of the many difficulties of that harassed leader and it was not until Benjamin Franklin came to his aid and persuaded the Pennsylvania wagoners to enlist that the expedition was able to make any progress westward. Conestoga wagoners also accompanied Gen. John Frobes on his march three years later to accomplish what Braddock had failed to do—the capture of the French fort at the forks of the Ohio.

The Conestoga wagons played their part, too, in the struggle for liberty. It was these vehicles which carried supplies to the American army during that terrible winter at Valley Forge and in the spring of 1778 a sturdy Conestoga wagon, drawn by four horses and with a full company of Continental soldiers as a guard, brought $600,000 in silver, the loan of the French government from Portsmouth, N. H., to the government treasury at York, Pa., (where the Continental congress was then meeting). But it was in the period after the Revolution that the Conestoga rose to its full glory—as the carrier of freight back and forth to the West and as the vehicle of the emigrants into the Kentucky and Ohio country. It also served once more as a weapon of war during the War of 1812 when Conestoga wagons carried powder from the Brandywine mills to Lake Erie, there to be used in Perry's brilliant victory at Put-in-Bay.

Sharing National Prosperity

HOW often we hear some one talk of "the good old days." Through the mist of the passing years, some people believe they see a rainbow with its pot of gold, that everyone shared in the "good old days." This picture is false—this imagined prosperity of the past is a myth.

The Good Old Days were never half as prosperous as the Present Days.

Today the average person is almost twice as well off as he was only a half dozen years ago. Prices are less now than they were then. Incomes are greater by a third. The average person, working—gainfully occupied—has an income of $2,000, while his predecessor of less than twenty years ago enjoyed less than half such an income.

We are a prosperous people in a prosperous country. Individual and family prosperity is evidenced by:

1. The increasing number of home owners.
2. Almost one auto to every family.
3. A radio in nearly every home.
4. Better household furnishings and equipment.
5. Crowded theaters, roads and amusement places.
6. More leisure for the worker because of shorter hours.
7. More students in schools and colleges.
8. Improved health and vital conditions in town and country.
9. Rapid growth of savings accounts.
10. Increase in insurance policies.
11. Increasing donations to charities and benevolences.

National prosperity guarantees that general conditions are sound. It signifies that exceptional opportunities are open to both individuals and communities. It further shows us, in the main, that the majority of towns and cities are prosperous; citizens are prosperous.

In order that all of us may share in this national prosperity, every resident of our community must diligently make an effort. The opportunity is ever present—the dice are not loaded—either for the average man or the average community.

It has been said that personal success is 10% inspiration and 90% perspiration. Likewise, community prosperity is largely the result of work—three quarters of it is a reward of business activity; only one quarter comes from investment. There is no substitute for work. By it we gain our full share of national prosperity.

With national prosperity increasing rapidly, a real opportunity awaits us as individuals and as a community—let us all take advantage of this opportunity by applying ourselves diligently to our tasks in

BUILDING MUST GO ON

Eleven million homes in America, occupied today, were built twenty years ago. A large percentage of these homes are suffering from obsolescence and must be replaced. When the work of replacement begins, as it must very soon, a wave of residential building will move across the country.

This conclusion of leading experts is confirmed by a recent statement by the heating research bureau of the C. A. Dunham Company in Chicago, which also declares that like residences, thousands of other buildings—business blocks, hotels, apartments, theatres and banks—are seriously impaired through obsolescence.

In many of these remodeling and modernizing is proceeding now, with the probability that the next few weeks will see substantial totals for this type of work. The statement further says:

"Reports to the bureau from branch offices in seventy cities show that many heating engineers are carrying on vigorous campaigns of modernization. Large operating economies are being effected by building owners through the banishment of obsolete plants, with substitution of scientific systems. Such changes are paid for within a comparatively short time by the savings in fuel which range from 25 to 40 per cent."

Reports further indicate that funds to meet demands for conservative building projects are becoming available in most sections of the country, so that on the whole the prospects for a substantial building revival seem better than at any time during the past year.

Male guests at a Turkish wedding are no longer privileged to beat the bridegroom, as was the former custom. That pleasure is now reserved for the bride.

College authorities have approved the expression: "What are you looking for?" The answer, we assume, is: "How can a fellow help it?"

NAMES OF TOWNS

If an "ask me another" fiend were to ask you what is the most popular name for towns in the United States, what would you guess? Unless you had checked up the names in the United States Postal Guide, it is safe to say that you would not hit upon the right name in a dozen guesses.

Of course, Washington would suggest itself, also Springfield, possibly Paris. But neither of them is the leader, although Washington stands in the second rank.

The most popular own name in the United States is Clinton, of which there are thirty.

Next comes Chester, Florence and Washington, with twenty-eight each; Cuayton, Madison, Marion and Troy, twenty-seven; Glenwood, Kingsport, Newport and Salem, twenty-six; Ashland and Centerville, twenty-five.

There are twenty-four Clevelands and the same number of Springfields, several of them being important cities. Other names range from this number down. There is only one New York, but two Chicagos, six Philadelphias, and eight Detroits.

The oustanding popularity of the name of Clinton is somewhat difficult to understand, although two statesmen of that name were very prominent in the early days of the Republic.

George Clinton was the first governor of the state of New York and was vice-president of the United States at the time of his death in 1812. His nephew, DeWitt Clinton, was also governor of New York and an unsuccessful candidate for the presidency, being defeated by Madison.

Whether it be through the fame of these statesmen or the euphony of the name itself, Clinton is the favorite name for towns in the United States.

Sometimes a man puts his religion, as well as his property, in his wife's name.

Naturally, "Old Dobbin" suggests a horse because no horse was ever named Dobbin.

FIRE IN 1930

During June, 1930, the fire loss in the United States was $31,818,266—just $1,787,397 less than in June, 1929. We have, however, nothing to be proud of, as this is the first month in 1930 in which such a decrease has been recorded. The total loss for the first six months of the year was $242,339,771, corresponding to $230,092,795 for the same period last year. In short, we have so far destroyed over twenty million dollars worth of property more than in 1929.

It cannot be too often repeated that the United States has the most gigantic fire loss, both total and per capita, in the world. Our carelessness in the matter of fire has become a national menace—and a national disgrace. Every year we sacrifice thousands of lives and half a billion dollars in property values. And, at the most conservative estimate, at least 80 per cent of this waste is entirely unnecessary.

Two factors are responsible for the waste—carelessness and ignorance. It is carelessness that allows us to drop cigarettes where we finish them; let wiring go unattended; pile trash in corners, and the like. Ignorance has bred the attitude of "Let the insurance company pay for it"—as if insurance companies could pay losses without in turn collecting from policy-holders. It should be thoroughly understood that every fire, whether or not the property is insured, represents a permanent economic loss that must be paid for, directly or indirectly, by the entire community.

Our fire losses will go down when American citizens take common sense precautions in their homes and their places of business, and when they are no longer deaf and blind to the simple rules of fire prevention.

MAKING CRIMINALS BY LAW

After twenty-five years, Kansas repealed its law unnder which it was a crime to manufacture sell or give away cigarettes. In order to close this breach in the wall of prohibitory legislation, the people of Oregon will be asked at the November election to suppress the cigarette by constitutional amendment.

This mania of a few fanatics to "judge their neighbor" is a national menace. They do not wait until the neighbor has broken some fundamental law before trying to punish him; they must pass a new law which is almost sure to make him a lawbreaker.

Such restrictive and prohibitory legislation is all proposed and presented to the people in the name of liberty and freedom. The irony of the situation is that when the people adopt such measures they simply reduce their own rights and liberties, make hundreds of thousands of new law-breakers and increase business opportunity for the real criminal element which obeys no law. In the words of the San Francisco Chronicle, "Creating so many artificial crimes seems rather a high price to pay even for the pure joy of passing laws to regulate other people's habits."

AGE SECRET UNKNOWN

Often interviewed on his birthday and asked the secret of his long life, Major Charles Manly Steadman of North Carolina, now 89 and the oldest member of Congress, has had little light to throw on the subject.

Once he said: "The whole secret of my long and active life is the providence of God." This answer was concise enough, but it would perhaps be of little benefit to anyone else.

Pressed for further details, he went on to tell something of his personal habits, saying:

"I smoke more cigars that the ordinary man, and have smoked a great deal most of my life. I eat anything I like that is set on the table before me. I do much walking at home, but in Washington I take no particular form of exercise."

Surely this is not a difficult regimen, but it might not work out with others as it has with the venerable Major, who first went to Congress when he was 70, and is now in his twentieth year of service at Washington.

While persons of extreme age aften believe that certain habits of life, or lack of habits, are responsible for their longevity, there appears to be no old age secret. Some folks just happen to live a long time, usually without making any special effort to do so.

A press dispatch tells of a poor fellow who "died without the aid of a doctor," but, fortunately, few have to shuffle off without such assistance.

UNCLE SAM'S CAMELS

Probably few persons know that once the United States army employed camels as a means of transportation in the southwest.

With a view to overcoming the difficulties of traversing the great American desert before there were any transcontinental railroads or highways, seventy-five camels were brought from Egypt and Asia Minor in 1856 by the War Department, while Jefferson Davis was Secretary of War.

The camels performed satisfactorily, but the Army "mule-skinners" did not like the beasts, besides they frightened the army horses and mules into a stampede on slight provocation. Before the experiment had progressed very far the Civil war broke out and the project was abandoned, some of the animals being sold to circuses while others were turned loose. Some of these, grown wild, were seen in Arizona as late as 1909, and some believe that a herd still exists in the uninhabited wastes of that region.

Finding of their bones may give rise to erroneous conclusions on the part of paleontologists of future ages.

WOES OF A PREACHER

Perceiving the difficulty of pleasing all the members of his flock, and reflecting upon the criticisms which he had long endured, the Rev. Basil Matthews, vicar of Holy Trinity church, London, voiced his lamentations recently in a rather humorous vein, in part as follows:

"Be he (the minister) grave in his demeanor, seeking to uphold the dignity of his cloth, he is said to be standoffish and uppish; yea, the ungodly call him 'Holy Joe.'

So then he trieth to be gay, but this, too, displeaseth some.

"With young men and maidens, if from them he hold aloof, they mislike him much. So that when they should turn to him as a friend, with them he cutteth no ice.

"If he exhorteth all men to abstain from strong drink, he is said to be a killjoy, and inhuman. But if he entereth a tavern and putteth his foot upon the rail of brass, there be those who say, 'Behold, a winebibber.' So when he bloweth froth he committeth iniquity, and when he bloweth it not he is likewise a sinner.

"Let the servant therefore walk in the steps of his Master, and care nought for the opinion of men."

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK

Gerald Jacobs, editor of the Kendrick (Oklahoma) News, says that when he was on a farm in Northern Oklahoma his mother had a very nice blue enameld range. A gas line came by, and she purchased a gas range.

While the blue range was worth $50, she never advertised it for sale in the newspaper in a town nearby, but stored it in the machine shed until it was destroyed by rust and rough handling.

An advertisement in this nearby paper would, no doubt, have made the newspaper a dollar and saved her forty-nine.

Newspaper advertising is helpful not only to the city merchant and the manufacturer, but to the farmer as well.

The advertising columns are the meeting place of trade. Use them if you have anything to sell or trade.

Big business has been built through the advertising of honest merchandise. It will do the same work for the farmer.

The 70-year-old Brooklyn woman who has just invented a new fire escape appears to have some misgivings concerning the hereafter.

A movement to find new uses for cotton is on foot, but not on milady's foot.

A human skull with horns has been found in Oregon. Maybe Old Nick is dead, after all.

STATE FAIR WILL LAST NINE DAYS

Indications that the California State Fair and Western Exposition will set a new record this year both in attendance and number of exhibits are in evidence as plans for the great show are being completed at fairgrounds in Sacramento. The fair will open on August 30, and will continue for nine days.

In addition to the eleven large exposition buildings, four mammoth tents will be required to accommodate the various departments of the exposition, it is stated by R. S. Condee, president.

Two of the biggest structures will be given over to the most remarkable display of products and resources ever assembled on the Pacific Slope. One of these, the horticultural pavilion, will house the exhibits of fifty-three California counties. The exhibits, now being installed, are the most attractive in the history of the State Fair. The other big structure—designated as the Western States building—will contain the displays of the states of Idaho, Oregon, New Mexico and Nevada; a special exhibit by the Southern Oregon and Northern California counties, and booths featuring products of Argentina, Brazil and several other South American countries.

The livestock, educational, and machinery, and other departments, of the exposition will be greater and more impressive than ever before, it is said, illustrating in a striking manner the theme chosen for this year's State Fair—"Eighty Years of Progress."

The program of attractions and entertainment this year will include two new features, steeple-chasing and polo. These events will be held on a five-eighths mile track which has been constructed in the enclosure of the mile race track. The enclosure of the smaller track will form the polo field.

BETHEL FULL GOSPEL MISSION

Sunday is always a glorious day with the folks who come to dine at the table which is always laden with the good things of Jesus. In the days of the old Roman emperors malfactors were put in prison in pairs, each pair being handcuffed together. When one of the prisoners died, the other one would have to drag the dead one around for probably several days. Can you imagine dragging the weight of a dead body around with you? Why, after only a few hours it would feel like a ton. Not only the weight has to be taken into consideration, but just think of the gruesomness of it. There is hardly a person who can look at a dead body but that cold chills run down your back, without alone dragging one around. There are plenty of people in Daly City today who are doing just this thing—dragging a dead body around with them. The body they are handcuffed to is more gruesome and heavier than the body of a Roman prisoner. It's harder to get rid of than any human body, too. Sin is the body which so many are dragging around with them. Space is not sufficient to describe this body in its awful entirety, but suffice to say that it is harder to get rid of than any human body. A handcuff can be cut through with a file but no file can cut our sinful habits to free us from the dead body we are carrying around. There is only one way to get relief from the burden of sin and that is found in the blood of Jesus Christ, our Savior. Dear reader, are you unhappy, and are you seeking for something to satisfy something you can not find? Do you want to lose that dead body of worry, dissatisfaction, and sin, to which you are shackeled? If so, come this next Sunday and let us show you the way to get free.

COUNTY-WIDE RALLY FOR SHERIFF McGRATH

Plans are under way for a county-wide rally to be held in Burlingame, Monday night, August 18, for Sheriff James J. McGrath. The meeting will be held in the American Legion hall at Lorton and Bayswater, and will get under way promptly at 8 o'clock.

McGrath for Sheriff clubs from every section of the county will attend the meeting, which will assume the aspect of a political convention. Certain sections will be allotted to the various cities and communities, and plans for a whirlwind closing week of the campaign will be made.

At this time definite plans for the great redlight parade across San Mateo county the night before election will be announced by the committee in charge. Sheriff McGrath will be the speaker of the evening.

Various communities will stage an impromptu attendance contest, Monday night, each endeavoring to outnumber the other in the number of delegates at the meeting. Burlingame, McGrath's home town, is expected to have the greatest number present in the delegation.

CELEBRATES BIRTHDAY

On Friday of last week Mrs. Stone Lantz, of Hanover street, gave a birthday party in honor of the fifth birthday of her son, Stone Lantz, Jr. The home was beautifully decorated in green, red and white. The honored guest received many lovely presents. The guests included Frances Anderson, Edgar Colby, Jim Davidson, Jim Frazier, Patsy Helen Frazier, Patricia Forrest, Stone Lantz, Jr., Ernest Lantz, Clinton Prescott, Teddy Prescott, Sonia Rosenhall, Ruth Rosenhall, Erwin Shelmadine, Floyd Shelmadine, Josephine Taramache, Donald Welch, Raymond Welch, Jr., and Nelly May Weiss.

An exchange tells of a new-born baby that weighed 23 pounds—on the iceman's scales.

San Mateo's valuation was placed at $6,532,175, of which $178,070 is personal property. The figure for Burlingame was set at $6,034,165, of which $161,435 is personal property.

GEORGE A. KNEESE ENDORSED BY DALY CITY COUNCILMEN

We, the undersigned City Councilmen of Daly City, California, hereby heartily endorse the candidacy of George A. Kneese for the office of County Surveyor of the County of San Mateo at the Primary Election to be held on August 26, 1930.

Mr. Kneese has held the office of County Surveyor since 1918, and has been our City Engineer for Daly City for the past fifteen years. He has been in complete charge of paving the streets, extensions to the water system, laying of sewers and all other public and city improvements. During that time he has also acted as adviser in all engineering problems affecting the city, and his work at all times has been completely satisfactory and of the highest type.

In studying and investigating the best plan under which to employ an engineer for the great amount of public improvement necessary in Daly City, the Board of Trustees in 1915 found that Mr. Kneese's plan was the most adequate and economical plan for the needs of our city, and consequently adopted it. Old methods were abandoned and his appointment followed.

The record of few cities will reveal the economy and efficiency that has been shown by his work since that time.

We, who have been in closest touch with the methods employed by Mr. Kneese, know that they are in keeping with the most modern and up to date business and engineering ideas. We have at all times received the most sincere co-operation from him, and all of this has proven to the best advantage and aided in many respects to the progress of Daly City.

It is only reasonable to assume that the same efficient, capable and honest methods of operation have been employed by Mr. Kneese in the administration of the County Surveyor's office, which he has held for the past twelve years.

We believe that such a splendid record deserves the united and enthusiastic support of every one, and we, therefore, as the members of your City Council, earnestly urge upon you to give to Mr. Kneese your fullest support and co-operation at the Primary Election, and by your votes return to office a most efficient, highly trained and faithful official.

Respectfully submitted,
H. H. SMITH, Mayor.

CELEBRATES FIFTH BIRTHDAY

Little Standley Nylund, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Nylund, Jr., of 333 Vista Grande avenue, celebrated his fifth birthday at his parent's home on last Friday. The dining room and table were prettily decorated in blue and yellow crepe paper streamers, with bon bons and favors to match. After the playing of games, prizes were awarded the winners. All enjoyed the beautiful birthday cake and many good things prepared by the hostess. Standley received many lovely gifts from his friends and relatives. Those present were: Ruby McGlumphy, Jerry Jones, Wilford Miller, Audrey Teal, Curtestine Teal, Billy Kirchubel, Fred Kirchubel, Bobbie Kirchubel, Ilean Pangburn, Gene Pangburn, Russell Pangburn, Charlotte Pangburn, Josephine Rivers, Frank Rivers, Marie Rivers, Virginia Rivers, Ralph Fullenbach, Raymond Nylund, Anna Marie Nylund, Mrs. D. PROVIDING SPORT FOR STATE ANGLERS

Among many other accomplishments, California now operates the largest and most complete fish hatchery in the world.

Discovery of this record has just been made in data gathered by J. H. Vogt, assistant to the chief of the Bureau of Fish Culture of the Division of Fish and Game.

This world institution is known as the Mt. Shasta hatchery and is located less than a mile from the town of Mt. Shasta, Siskiyou county. It is one of the twenty-eight fish hatcheries now running in various sections of California.

There are five main hatchery buildings at the Shasta hatchery, 464 hatching troughs and more than 30 outside ponds for the raising and retention of brooding stock. These ponds will produce more than ten million eggs annually, records show. Besides the superintendent, G. H. Lambson, there is a crew of more than 20 men who work the year around to produce planting fish for the entire state.

Vogt states that this one hatchery produces all the German brown and Loch Leven eggs used in all the other state hatcheries. Other trout propagated here are the rainbow and eastern brook.

Because of the great demand for planting of stock in the thousands of miles of fishing streams in this state, the fish from this hatchery are distributed to all sections of the state in Division of Fish and Game distribution cars. The Mt. Shasta Hatchery also supplies the plants in the streams of the immediate district.

California's angling population has grown so fast during the past few years, 229,374 angling licenses being issued last year, that officials for the conservation of the state's fish and game resources have kept the hatchery running full tilt the year around.

The Mt. Shasta Hatchery is also getting to be one of the great show places of the state. The register shows that hundreds of people from all parts of the world visit the place annually.

ORIGIN OF STATE PARKS IS TRACED

A north-central state recently claimed prestige for having originatto the system of State Parks. According to the report broadcast, this "first" State Park was created in 1878.

According to Earl Soto of the Division of Fish and Game, that organization closely co-operates with the California State Park system, and so, when the above statement was brought to their attention, Mrs. Bessit W. Kibbe, division librarian, became interested and did a little research work.

In a reference book compiled by Beatrice Ward Nelson, executive secretary of the National Conference of State Parks, the following information was given:

"California was the first state in the Union to create a State Park. Curiously enough, the first State Park is now our famous Yostmite Valley. The Yosemite Valley and the Mariposa grove of big trees were given to the state for recreational purposes by an act of Congress in 1865." Yosemite Valley was turned back to the govtrnment in 1905 to be used as a part of the National Park system.

California now has twenty-eight State Parks, comprising a total of 21,480 acres. This does not include the National Parks of the state. An excellent system of roads leads to the heart of these wonderlands, being cartfully guarded for posterity by the Division of Fish and Game.

Incidentally, the Division of Fish and Game maintains one of the finest and most complete libraries, covering natural life, in teh state. Besides furnishing information to members of the division who are making scientific studies of our natural resources the library is becoming of popular benefit to sportsmen and others interested in the welfare of the state.

SIDELIGHTS

George Bernard Shaw, the inimitable British dramatist, is delightfully and humorously egotistical, as a recent remark illustrates. It being rumored that he might be offered a seat in the House of Lords, Shaw said: "If they could find me a more distinguished title than George Bernard Shaw, I might consider it."

Among the exhibitions of the silly season, which include much tree sitting and other trivial endurance stunts, one James Smith is out with a bid for fame. He proposes to walk backwards from Chicago to San Francisco.

Forty per cent of Chicago's high school girls disapprove petting, according to an observing clergyman. The accuracy of his estimate is somewhat open to question, however, as the reverend gentleman has spent several recent years in the Philippine Islands. Since he has been away the number of non-petters may have fallen 39 per cent.

The distinguished operatic producer, Alfredo Salmaggi, recently presented Verdi's opera "Aida" at a New York baseball park, with three camels, three elephants and eight horses in the "cast." But Salmaggi is digusted with the modern tendency to canned music, radio reproduction and the like, and has forbidden his nine children to become musicians. He will not even have a musical instrument in his home.

Tennis prizes, like All-American football teams, are somewhat mythical, it seems. Returning from another tennis conquest in England, Helen Wills Moody declared that although she has won the famed Wimbledon cup four times, she has never laid eyes on it.

Two fish stories from widely separated parts: Fred Hammon, of Selma, Alabama, claims to have caught two trout at the same time with one hook baited with a minnow, the trout weighing five and two pounds respectively. Karl Sohlman, of Toemte, Sweden, caught a large pike and a fish hawk at one cast of his net, the fish attracting the hawk, which became entangled in the net.

Miss Belle Ryans, of Savannah, Georgia, recently interviewed by a representative of the Associated Press, furnished material for an interesting sketch, the high spots of which were these: Born in 1811; married at 15 and lived with her first husband 75 years until his death; when past 99 married again; smokes her pipe at the age of 119; would like to fly in an airplane, but her folks won't let her.

ORGANIZE TO WAGE WAR ON HIGHWAY ADVERTISING

Formal organization for a war on Peninsula billboards was instituted last Friday by a special committee of the Hillsborough Garden Club, numbering in its membership many prominent society women. Mrs. Cyril Tobin, of Hillsborough, heads the committee which will carry the fight under sponsorship of the California Council for Protection of Roadside Beauty.

Affiliated with the Hillsborough women, who declare that the menace of billboards is rapidly becoming an economic problem because it is driving tourists from the roads lined with unsightly advertising, are garden clubs of San Francisco, Palo Alto, Woodside, Atherton, Piedmont, Santa Barbara, St. Francis Woods and other organizations, including the Junior League, San Francisco, the San Francisco Society of Women Artists, and the Redwood Empire Association.

Tourists are going to foreign countries instead of coming to California, because of the unsightly signs, declared members of the committee. Scenic spots are being ruined for the future, they stated.

FOREST CONSERVATION

In the past, lumbermen have been criticized for depletion and waste of the country's forests, and it may be that much timber has been cut without proper regard for future needs. At present, however, the lumbermen appear to be keenly alive to the necessity for conservation of timber and reforestration of cut-over areas. In fact, such a movement among the lumbermen has been under way in several states for quite a while.

At a convention in Chicago, the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association commended the interest in reforestration being taken by the government and by the forestry departments of many states. A resolution adopted by the convention said:

"We urge continuance of this interest and co-operation, both public and private, to bring about sound conditions for perpetuating our forest industry."

Better means of fire protection in existing forests were also recommended, as wall as favorable tax measures to encourage private forest-growing enterprises.

It is fortunate that this matter is engaging the attention of the country at large to a greater extent than ever before. No natural resource is more essential to our national welfare than our forests.

ADDRESS OF JAMES S. JAMES, CANDIDATE FOR COUNTY SURVEYOR

At Burlingame Meeting, August 7, 1930

The issues in this campaign, as far as the office of County Surveyor is concerned, have been fairly well defined throughout the County. I will summarize the pertinent facts concerning the present administration of the office, and I will limit myself to facts.

JAMES S. JAMES

The County Surveyor of this County is permitted to carry on a PRIVATE ENGINEERING PRACTICE IN AND FROM THE COUNTY COURT HOUSE in conjunction with the County work which is covered by his official duties. The same crews are used on both kinds of work.

It is to be distinctly understood that I make no charge, directly or by inference, concerning the honesty, integrity, or ability of my opponent, but he has taken advantage of his position to build up his private engineering practice during the twelve years he has been in office to such an extent that it now far exceeds the County work. The private practice now covers the engineering work of ten or more cities and towns in San Mateo County, of all but one or two of the sanitary districts, water districts and public utility districts, of all county assessment districts, and a large percentage of the subdivision and other private engineering work. None of this work is covered by his salary as County Surveyor, but it is all being done from the County Court House. He receives his fees from the cities, towns, districts, or individuals for whom the work is done, but he pays no rent.

THE RESULT IS AN ENGINEERING MONOPOLY CONTROLLED BY THE COUNTY SURVEYOR.

Monopoly spells high costs. Consequently, the TAXPAYERS of San Mateo County are placed in the same position as the "OTHER ENGINEER." Their viewpoints are identical.

At the last session of the legislature, our Assemblyman, Harry Parkman, in the interests of the taxpayers, introduced and succeeded in having passed by both branches of the legislature a new SAN MATEO COUNTY GOVERNMENT BILL. This bill died by pocket veto. It would have cured the conditions I have mentioned above, and it certainly was popular approved throughout the County. The methods used in killing the bill were devious. I am reliably advised that they consisted entirely of the wrong kind of politics. When the WRONG KIND OF POLITICS IS ADDED TO ANY KIND OF MONOPOLY YOU HAVE A DANGEROUS CONDITION. San Mateo County citizens have a vital interest in the conduct of the affairs of the County. They will resent any interference with measures designed for their welfare and benefit.

San Mateo County has certainly kept the pace with progress insofar as our street improvements are concerned. Public improvements are necessary, but it is my private opinion, publicly expressed, that we are at the present time far ahead of our ability to pay. Some twenty-three county improvement and special assessment districts have been formed, and in many instances the cost of the improvements exceeds the value of the properties assessed. I think we have come to the time when special assessments must be limited to absolute necessities.

Now as to a remedy for the conditions complained of:

A County Surveyor, if he is so minded, can correct at least some of the conditions in his office without waiting for legislation to regulate his conduct. By filing nomination papers for the office of County Surveyor, I have offered my full time services for a four-year period, for the purpose of reorganizing that office and demonstrating how it can be administered in the best interests of those who pay the bills.

In order to insure you against the possibility that I might be seeking the office merely to perpetuate the present engineering monopoly for my own personal gain, I have publicly, both in print and in various talks, pledged myself as to how I propose to remedy the conditions complained of. I have reduced this pledge to writing. It is as follows:

I will conduct the affairs of the County Surveyor's office with the same efficiency and economy that apply to the engineering departments of all MODERN BUSINESS ORGANIZATIONS.

I will entirely segregate private engineering from County engineering and CONFINE THE USE OF COUNTY OFFICES STRICTLY TO COUNTY BUSINESS, thereby eliminating competition between the County and private engineers.

I will devote my ENTIRE TIME to the duties of the office, with the conviction that only through such procedure will the best interests of the taxpayers and citizens of the County be served.

Inasmuch as I am financing the total costs of my own campaign, and since I will not have the support of any of the so-called interests, I can promise you with a clear conscience that when I am elected no unhealthy influence can be brought to bear by any individual or coropration to dictate my conduct in office.

If you agree with me and believe in me, I ask your ACTIVE SUPPORT. That is very necessary because of the strong machine which has been built up largely through political patronage methods. In return, I offer you my best services to the limit of my ability for a four-year term in the office of County Surveyor of San Mateo County.

JAMES S. JAMES,
Candidate for County Surveyor of San Mateo County.

TRINITY COUNTY TO WAR AGAINST INCENDIARIES

Their lives, homes and business menaced by recent incendiary activities which have threatened to destroy their community, fifty residents of Hayfork Valley, Trinity county, within the Trinity National Forest, have formed a protective association, to prevent recurrence of this vandalism, states Regional Forester S. B. Shaw of the U. S. Forest Service. An executive committe was appointed and letters sent to all the residents of Hayfork Valley asking co-operation in preventing forest fires because of the interfernece with their business, danger to ranches, stock and crops, the discouragement to recreational travel that has brought vacationists into their community because of its forest and scenic attractions.

The association will co-operate with the U. S. Forest Service in fire prevetnion work and plans to surround Hayfork Valley with a wide firebreak as a further protection against the red destroyer.

SAN FRANCISCO PLANS A HARBOR DAY FETE

Thursday, August 21, has been set as the date for celebrating San Francisco's second annual Harbor Day. This fete is being sponsored by the San Francisco Junior Chamber of Commerce, under the direction of Wilson Meyer, chairman of the Marine committee of that organization. Social and civic clubs, leaders in the industrial life of the Bay region, and city and state officials have all placed their stamp of approval upon this affair.

The main feature of the day will be the Naval parade. Other attractions will include an aerial display, inspection of both Naval and merchant vessels, and a colorful display of night fireworks.

The steamship companies have entered into the spirit of educating San Francisco's citizens, and those of the surrounding region, as to the merits of her harbor. The city has offered prizes for the best models of yachts made by school children. The better of these models, together with the models of steamships as displayed by the steamship companies, will be on exhibit in the Ferry building.

Market street and the water front will be gaily decorated for the occasion.

INCREASE IN MOTOR VEHICLE FATALITIES

An increase of fifty-six deaths, or 5.5 per cent, resulting from motor vehicle accidents in the first six months of this year over the corresponding period of 1929 was announced last Wednesday by Frank G. Snook, chief of the Division of Motor Vehicles.

During this six months period there was an increase in motor vehicle registration of 6 per cent. Considering the increased mileage of each vehicle due to California's wonderful highway system and the many hazards each additional car presents, the increase of only 5.5 per cent in the number of deaths presents an extremely encouraging situation, especially when several Eastern states report increases as high as 60 per cent.

Cmmenting upon the California increase of 5.5 per cent, Eugene W. Biscaluz, superintendent of the California highway patrol, said: "It is a matter of record that approximately 20 per cent more people are killed in motor vehicle accidents during the last six months of the year than during the first. Therefore, every motorist and every pedestrian should exercise the utmost care during the coming months to see that he is not involved in an accident. The California highway patrol is doing all in its power to reduce accidents and the motor vehicle death rate by training its men in first aid and traffic control. Patrolmen are assigned to special duty during emergencies in order to warn the motorists of dangerous conditions that may prove fatal, and urge the individual drivers to accept this advice for their protection."

Records of the Bureau of Research, Statistics and Traffic Safety state that from January 1 to June 30, 1930, there were 14,213 accidents reported, resulting fatally to 1,066 persons and in injury to 18,696. Collisions with pedestrians killed 383 and injured 4,201. Of the 1,066 persons killed, 196 were less than 20 years of age.

It is significant to note that during the month of May there were fifty-three more deaths than in May, 1929. This is one of the largest increases during any one month ever recorded in California. The heavy increase in traffic brought about by the ideal weather experienced during the month of May contributed materially to the increase in accidents, while fast driving over unfamiliar roads, especially in the mountainous country, accounted for many deaths. Responsibility in such accidents lies entirely with the driver. When traversing roads with which he is not familiar he should have his car under complete control at all times in order to meet the sudden emergencies that often lie just around the curve ahead.

NOTED STAR COMING TO THE CURRAN THEATRE, AUGUST 18

San Francisco theatregoers will be given their first opportunity to see the most talked about young star on the American stage when Katherine Cornell makes her California debut on Monday evening, August 18, in the Curran Theatre, San Francisco, in "Dishonored Lady," her big success of last season at the Empire Theatre in New York.

Miss Cornell has, within a half dozen years, become a celebrity on the New York and London stages. She has won triumph after triumph in "A Bill of Divorcement," "The Green Hat," "Candia," "The Age of Innocence," "Dishonored Lady," and several other outstanding successes.

"Dishonored Lady" is the story of another Irish March who has the courage of each emotional impulse, each physical desire, and who ultimately, in a moment of vivid comprehension, finds herself battling to destroy with one ruthless gesture even the symbols of a somewhat earthly past. As the central figure of this moving drama, a wistfully fascinating subject of an hereditary emotional urge, Miss Cornell moves her colorful way through scenes of vibrant intensity, again proving herself an actress of trancedental gifts, as well as one of the most glittering personalities now on the American stage.

Mr. Gilbert Miller and Mr. Guthrie McClintic are sending to San Francisco the same brilliant cast which supported Miss Cornell during last season's run in the Empire Theatre, New York.

In "Dishonored Lady," Margaret Ayer Barnes and Edward Sheldon have written an intense and magnetic drama of present day New York as well as one that will provoke widespread discussion.

Miss Cornell is coming to San Francisco for a limited engagement as a preface to a tour of the United States in her most talked about role.

A professor declares that married men are smarter than single ones. But then they have to be.

Memphis policemen have organiged a glee club, probably to terrorize the crooks who have an ear for music.

An Arkansas barber's home was burned, doubtless by some fellow he had worried about having a singe.

A critic declares an English movie actress to be without a peer. But she is probably doing her best to land one.

WOULD SHARE IN OUR PROSPERITY

With their faces turned toward the West, thousands of Europeans look forward to the time when they may be permitted to come to the shores of America. To them it is the land of freedom and prosperity. It is their ultimate ambition to live as we live. The comforts and conveniences that we have as a matter of course seem to them like the richest kind of luxuries. They wish to share in our national prosperity.

Because we have grown accustomed to our privileges, perhaps, we fail to appreciate how fortunate we are to be living in America today in the midst of the greatest prosperity in the history of mankind. And yet, the division of this national prosperity is not equal—all individuals and communities are not sharing alike. Why?

Personal success and community prosperity are largely the result of work. Prosperity may be compared to a load of grain being hauled to its destination by human labor. Some are "putting their shoulders to the wheel," some are walking along doing nothing, and some insist on riding. To share this prosperity, both individuals and communities must put forth a well directed effort—they must work for their portion. No substitute has been found for work.

Do we of Daly City deserve to share in the national prosperity? In this week's Community Development Campaign this matter is fully discussed. Here will be found facts and figures that are the evidence of individual, family and community prosperity. Here is the material that will familiarize us with our relative position in regard to other individuals and communities, here the facts that should spur us on to greater effort. The parade of prosperity is ever marching onward, and to be in the front ranks of this parade we must deserve the position. For both our individual welfare and for the welfare of Daly City, we must work for our share of national prosperity.

FAST HORSES FEATURE AT STOCKTON'S FAIR

Horse races, with the fastest animals in the West entered, a horse show featuring the most famous stables in the United States, prize cattle, poultry, agricultural exhibits, daredevil stunts and sideshows are all to be seen at the San Joaquin county fair to be held in Stockton, August 18 to 24, directors announced on the completion of the program.

A new feature of the fair this year is the "Queen of Cooks" contest in which girls under 18 years of age will cook before the thousands who attend the event in an effort to win the cooking crown of the county.

State records are expected to be broken in the horse races, which will be held each afternoon during the fair. Pegasus Pointer, a two-year-old, who recently paced the mile in 2:11, unofficially beating the state record by a quarter, is picked to break the record in speed events. Other local and state records may also be shattered.

Nationally known horsemen who have entered their animals in the show include Walter Crouch, Aaron M. Frank, Irving Hellman, G. Albert Shriner, and Alex Young, Jr.

Livestock will come from every section of the United States, attracted by purses of nearly $20,000. The fair awards total $60,000 of which $20,000 will go to the show horses and $20,000 to the racing horses. Livestock, agricultural and similar exhibits will compete for the balance.

RELIEF FROM CURSE OF CONSTIPATION

A Battle Creek physician says, "Constipation is responsible for more misery than any other cause."

But immediate relief has been found. A tablet called Rexall Orderlies has been discovered. This tablet attracts water from the system into the lazy, dry, evacuating bowel called the colon. The water loosens the dry food waste and causes a gentle, thorough, natural movement without forming a habit or ever increasing the dose.

Stop suffering from constipation. Chew a Rexall Orderlie at night. Next day bright. Get 24 for 25c today at the nearest Rexall Drug Store. Edwards' Drug Store, Mission street, near San Jose avenue. —Adv.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist. Her sister, Lillian, urges her to break off the affair, but Ernestine refuses. A runaway marriage follows. Loring Hamilton wins Lillian's consent to become his wife. Will and Ernestine begin their married life in humble surroundings. John Poole, Will's best friend, gives a birthday party for Ernestine at Ruby Pastano's resort. Ernestine and Will have their first quarrel as a result.

"I didn't say that. Certainly he has responsibilities. He is to provide for her to the best of his ability. He is to share all his earnings and his honors with her. He is to shelter her and speak kindly to her and love her and not find fault. He is to be faithful in word and thought. He is to be natural in his relationship with her and avoid sentimentality. But also, she is to be a woman grown and unafraid, his equal, not a child for him to protect like a child."

"You are so hard," she wept, "so hard with me."

He bent and kissed her and pressed his face to hers. "It's life," he said. "We have to grow up. Life is hard."

Ernestine wakened next morning to find that the pain and confusion of the night before had vanished into a new and not unhappy perspective on her life.

For the first time she could see what a blow it had been to mamma and papa to have her living in Erie street, with no margin, no possessions, no possibility of restraint or economy. How difficult is was—perhaps for their sakes she ought to co-operate with mamma and papa to do something for them. Enough money for a decent flat—a small comfortable house—it would be so much easier for mamma.

But Ernestine felt again the cold wind on her cheeks, remembered vividly how she had wept, and how she had said, again and again, "I promise, Will—I promise." He had asked her for no such statement. She had done the bargaining. Whatever it cost—to her family or to herself—she would keep that promise to Will, and live on what he brought her until he himself told her to do otherwise.

Ernestine began to wonder if she would be as good a wife and mother as Elaine Briceland, when the time came that Will had made good.

She paused to consider this thought and smiled happily, for now she saw that for the first time she was entirely confident of Will's success. It had been as much longing as conviction before, but now she was sure. How hard he was! His hardness brought only admiration this morning, the practical respect of a practical person. "If you want to go back, you've only to put on your hat and do it!" She wondered how many men had the courage to take a stand like that.

She did not regret the quarrel at all. Her marriage had attained a new reality. She knew that she was not simply having a good time. She knew that she could not go home when the party was over. They had advanced from the honeymoon period into permanence.

In what way, here and now, could she make this new feeling practical, make it effective?

How would they meet the obligation of childbirth? Would she go home to mamma or to some hospital? They would have to plan without mamma if they were to be consistent. She understood that babies were frightfully expensive. She had read articles in magazines about them. Yet thousands of women with no more money than she possessed had babies. She would have to find out how they managed.

She would have to see a doctor, ask questions, answer them. She would have to find out the rates at different hospitals, under different conditions. And after she had investigated the matter and decided on her own plan, she would have to begin to save a definite amount every week, out of Will's pay, so that they might meet the emergency. That would be fun—to have money in her hand, when her time came!

She decided to say nothing to Will about this, until she knew. Like her mother, she must exercise her virtue privately and let results speak for her. She had a few dollars with which to open a savings account. There was a bank nearby, a branch of a downtown bank. She would get a metal coin chest for herself and Will.

Her mental activity now became physical, and she rose and dressed, kissed Will lightly on the cheek, and left a note on the dresser for him, lest he think she had taken his advice and gone home. Downstairs she found a box full of roses for her, and a card in it with a few words written in an erect elaborate script:

"To beg forgiveness for my rudeness, and to express the hope that we may be real friends some day.—L. S. Pastano."

Ernestine gave the roses to Mrs. Bennett without comment and went out.

Last April she had been a schoolgirl. Now she was filled with the solemn importance of wifehood and motherhood. The sweet air filled her with happiness. Her husband's face fled before her mind's eye, down the long curve of boulevard, an indignant countenance, fiery, strong. Her heart contracted within her at the thought of him and his love.

The visit to the doctor's was prolonged, but she reached mamma's house in time for lunch, and found the two women so full of Lillian's plans that she kept her own secret.

Determined to make the day complete she left early and set out for the long tiresome street car ride to the Northwest side. She was ashamed to realize how few were the visits she and Will had made to the little house where his mother and father lived. She was at her mother's home two or three times a week, but they had not been to see Will's mother half a dozen times in the months of their marriage. It was not intentional neglect, but it always seemed to work out that way, and Will had been as lax as she about spending his one day a week on that long journey.

CHAPTER VI

Ernestine Asks a Favor

When Ernestine reached her mother-in-law's house, she was astonished to find a crowd of people standing about the door, and to see a taxi just driving away, and another car at the curb. When she came into the group, every one fell silent, and Ernestine looked at the faces with curiosity and a sense of fear.

"What's the matter?" she said nervously to a big housewife who opened the door for her.

"Will's been trying to find you—they just brought his pa home. He's dead—dropped dead at his work today, and his ma's real bad. I got Will on the telephone, at the paper, and he came right out here, but he didn't know where you was."

Ernestine stood staring at her, and her hand went up to her heart in a frightened gesture.

"Where's Will?" she asked wildly.

"He's in with his ma. Go still—the doctor's working with her. She's been awful bad the last few days. I've been with her all the time."

"But she didn't tell us."

"She thought she'd be better—she's been sick so long—"

Will looked up as she came in and called her name softly. She went straight to him and put her arms around him. His face was wet with tears—he was not the positive, fiery creature with whom she had quarreled so bitterly the night before, but a little boy, lost and confused. She kissed him quickly, several times, and he said to her:

"I'm glad you got here—Mrs. Bennett didn't know where you were. Oh, Ernestine—mom's so sick—the doctor doesn't know whether she'll ever be better—and dad gone like that—just like a breath. I haven't seen him for three weeks."

"Darling—he'd want to go—quickly," said Ernestine, feeling the futility of words—the emptiness of comfort. It wasn't her father, her conscience told her. She and Will had been neglectful.

The doctor came out of the bedroom and asked Ernestine crisply to get him some hot water. Ernestine took off her fur coat and her little red hat and went into the kitchen. There was a fire in the small range, and awkwardly she put some coal upon it and set the teakettle on to heat. The doctor asked her for towels. She waited on him as well as she could and accepted in silence his sharp reprimand when she was clumsy.

The neighbors had dissolved. Mrs. Schluss, who lived next door, came in and made a little supper. She put it on the kitchen table and said to Ernestine:

"See if you can get Will to eat—he's in there crying."

"I will," said Ernestine, and Mrs. Schluss went on:

"You'll have to stay here, now, I guess. Will's ma shouldn't have been left alone, and now, his pa's dead, there's nobody to look out for her but you and Will."

"Of course I'll come," said Ernestine. "I'd have come before, if I had known that I was needed. We didn't want to be a burden—"

She found this phrase in her mind as she coaxed Will to eat a little supper. Had their motives been entirely unselfish, in going to Erie street? Hadn't they wanted to be alone—away from his people? Should she have stayed with Will's mother, and nursed her, and done the work? There was no question but that Mrs. Schluss, and probably other neighbors as well, thought that she should. Her heart ached with remorse.

Will stayed in the kitchen with her, and Ernestine washed the dishes and put them all away, going to him at times and patting or caressing him. The undertaker came, the doctor left and returned about nine o'clock. He called Will into the other room, but after a time Will came back into the kitchen, where Ernestine sat, not knowing what to do.

"Ernestine—" Will looked at her uncertainly; his eyes appeared small and red with weeping, his nose seemed unusually big in his pale face, and his mouth was like a child's. "The doctor thinks we ought not have the funeral here—because of mother being so ill. The noise, and people coming in and out—he thinks she is ill enough that it might go against her. Do you—do you think your mother—I don't want him buried in a chapel—and he didn't belong to any church. He was an officer in an ethical society—they'll have the services—I don't known what to plan—"

The back door opened and Mrs. Schluss came in while he was talking, and with her another neighbor—Ernestine remembered having met him once before. His name was John Pryor, and he was a printer. Ernestine understood the entreaty in Will's eyes—but her heart sank: Mamma did not like funerals, and least of all would she like this one.

"I'll ask," she said uncertainly, and went to the telephone which was hung on the kitchen wall. It seemed an eternity before Ernestine heard her mother's voice. Falteringly, she told her what had happened—wondering why she had not called her sooner.

"But, darling," cried mamma, "to think of you in all that trouble—I'll send the car right after you. You must come home to mamma until this is all over—you've never been to a funeral in your life, Ernestine. It will be so hard for you."

"Mamma," said Ernestine with vexation, "you know I can't come—I'm needed here. It's something else I called you for. Mamma, they can't have the funeral here at the house, because Will's mother is so ill it would be dangerous for her, and, of course, Will doesn't want his father buried from the funeral parlors, and he doesn't belong to any church—we don't know just what to do, mamma—" She couldn't say it. She simply could not.

"It's too bad you and Will aren't keeping house," said mamma. "If you had let papa help you you could do this for Will, now."

"You don't want to, mamma? I thought perhaps—your house is so big—that you would do this for Will. I'm asking you to have Will's father's funeral at our—at your house, mamma—" All their eyes were on her—her face was scarlet, her eyes were suffused with tears of humiliation.

"Why, Ernestine," said mamma, in a troubled voice, "I don't know. I'll have to talk to daddy—grandmother's not well. Wait a minute—hold the wire."

Ernestine stood in silence, saying to Will with her lips, "She's asking papa," waiting in the endless interval, certain of refusal—already hurt and resentful.

"Ernestine," mamma's voice was terribly sympathetic, "we're all just as sorry as we can be, but papa doesn't think Mr. Todd would want it. It doesn't seem practical, dear—the funeral home right there in his own neighborhood—lots of people are buried from such chapels every day, darling. Don't ask mamma to do such a hard thing—"

Ernestine hung up the receiver without a word and turned strained great eyes upon Will. John Pryor regarded her with a sarcastic smile. He was a socialist, or an anarchist, or something, Ernestine recalled.

"Will," he said with instant kindness, "let me have this funeral for you? It's right here, in the neighborhood, and it won't be a bit of trouble—your father and I belong to the same society—it would be all right with him, I know."

"All right," said Will dully, and turned to the undertaker: "Fix it that way—will you tend to the notices?"

"Will," Ernestine implored him, "it's not my fault—they don't understand—"

He patted her arm and tried to control his feelings.

"That's all right, kitten. I know you can't help it—it's just their way." His face worked, and suddenly he clenched his big hand. "My father—he was good enough to work for yours, for half his lifetime—good enough for that—but not good enough for his dead body—"

"Will—Will—don't—don't, darling—oh, you must not say such a thing—sweetheart."

"Let him cry," said Mrs. Schluss wisely, and Will cried upon Ernestine's shoulder—his tears wet her blouse, and she held him, feeling the great sobs rack him, wondering dimly if she would mourn for her father that way.

This would be her home, she resolved, kissing his tear-wet face, holding him to her heart. She would stay with Will and his mother. Her people had denied her husband the kindness that was due among kinsfolk. They had denied her. She felt that she didn't care whether she ever saw them again. If they had done this for Will, everything else would have followed, but now, in common loyalty to her husband, she had to recognize this hurt.

She was almost fainting with weariness. It seemed to her the night would never end.

Papa came in his big car and took Ernestine and Will and Mrs. Schluss to the burying ground. Will accepted this courtesy with dignity. He was not the person to quibble at a time like this.

The services of the Ethical society were brief and dignified. It was Ernestine's first acquaintance with death, and she felt the power of human dignity, felt as she had never felt before the common inheritance, the integrity of Will's father's life.

When they came back, Ernestine sat in the car and talked to her father a few minutes. She told him that she and Will were to stay at the little house, that she was going to try her hand at housework and nursing. She should have done it sooner—she didn't realize, she said, that she was needed.

She ought not reproach herself, her father answered—she had done quite well to avoid being a responsibility to Will's father and mother.

"That wasn't enough," said Ernestine. "I've a new set of values to learn."

"You think the ones you learned at home inadequate?"

"I didn't mean that."

"You've been very quiet with me all day. Do you resent our attitude?"

Ernestine was near to tears. "It hurt Will," she said, her voice shaking. "It forces me to take a stand—I have to be loyal to Will. Papa, I love you all so, but I love Will most. He's my husband. If he's hurt, so am I."

Her father's face had grown very white. He sat studying his gloved hand upon the polished steering wheel.

"That's right," he said after a little. "After all, that's part of what you learned at home—I hope. I thought—your mother wants me to tell you—we'll establish a trust fund for you and one for Lillian when she is married. I've got my money tied up in this stone merger, but I can settle some on you now, and more later, or I can give you an allowance." He stopped, controlled his emotion, and went on steadily, "I still think your marriage will prove disastrous, but you're my little girl—I want you to be happy. Of course, you can always come home, but as long as you stay with Will, I'd like to do what I can for you, Ernestine."

It was a long speech for him. He was always quick, half a phrase, half a sentence, sufficed him. Ernestine's hands squeezed his arm, she pulled him down and kissed him, and he put his big arm, awkward in his overcoat, about her, and drew her close.

"Before Will and I were married—he—he thought you might think he wanted my money—wanted some advantage, and I promised him I'd live his life, live on his income. I made a bargain and I must stand by it, papa. But I'm glad you told me—if I should need money, I'll let you know. Thank you."

He kissed her again, and they said goodby. The conversation had washed away a little of her resentment and made her feel better. She had a strong desire to cling to her own family, opposed by the resolution she had taken to harden her heart against them all. She thought of mamma and Lillian and Loring, come in Loring's coupe, standing quiet and in a little tight knot at the funeral. She had taken her own stand by Will and Mrs. Schluss, and Mr. and Mrs. Pryor.

The day after the funeral when Ernestine, with one of Mrs. Todd's aprons pinned over an old silk dress, was experimenting with a broom, Mr. Pastano came, and with him a huge old lady with slow black eyes and a face so round and kind that Ernestine's heart went out to her.

Mr. Pastano had brought some potted plants, which seemed fresh and beautiful after the scent of decay that had come with the funeral sets.

"These are for Willie's mamma," Madame Pastano said haltingly. "We come to make consolation call—to bring you friendship. As the plants grow, so grows the new soul, in Heaven."

Ernestine yielded to impulse, was enfolded on the soft and luxurious bosom of Madame Pastano and kissed her smooth cheek. How strange that all of her haughty resentment was gone, that she actually liked Ruby Pastano, with his slow thick voice and his mottled dark eyes.

"When Willie's mamma is better, you will come to visit us?" the old lady asked, and Ernestine called her husband Willie for days afterward. She promised to come.

Will was worried about money, and Ernestine tried to spend as little as possible. Mr. Todd's lodge insurance had paid for his funeral and left a small balance, which was soon eaten up by the heavy expenses of the mother's illness. Will asked for a raise and got five dollars. At length he was forced to borrow from Mr. Poole, although Ernestine told him she could get money from her father.

"Money!" he burst out passionately. "I don't want any Briceland money! We wanted something real from them. Money's all they have."

"You'll have to increase your earnings, Will."

"It takes time. And I intend to do it on my own job, not in your father's office. Your folks must understand that."

"Lillian says beggars can't choose," she said.

"This beggar chooses," he warned her.

* * * * * * * *

Will's mother began to mend a little, the third or fourth week, although she was desperately ill. One day she asked Ernestine how they were managing, and Ernestine confessed that they had had to borrow.

"The Troy street house is in my name," said Mrs. Todd. "Tell Will the deed and all are in his father's box—tell him to have some real estate office sell it. I'll sign the deed—it will be more than enough for my illness."

"But, mother, when you are better, you will need your money."

"I'll not be better. And I'd like to have the nurse all the time now."

So the house was sold, and the few thousand dollars they got for it certainly made a remarkable difference. The doctor brought them a resident nurse. Ernestine and Will agreed that they should spend Mrs. Todd's money only for the expense of her illness.

On the day that Lillian was married Mrs. Todd was able to sit up, and Will consented to go to the wedding. The church was filled with flowers—the bridesmaids made a rainbow—Ernestine had pleaded the excuse of mourning for taking no part in the ceremony. The pews were filled with old familiar faces—the ushers were young men Ernestine and Lillian had known always. Everything was very beautiful and formal, and Ernestine realized that mamma would have liked such a wedding for her.

She was glad afterward, that she had gone, for the weeks and months just passed had been so hard for her that the beauty of her own romance had become a little dimmed. But when she heard the marriage ceremony again, when she stood by Will and watched her sister marry Loring Hamilton, she remembered every word and every kiss of her own marriage day—its storms and turmoil, and she looked at Will, at his clear strong face, at his lean bony body in the shabby suit, at the big square hands resting on his knees, and the richness of her love for him welled up in her like a great tide that would and must carry everything before it.

How Fledging Cuckoo Ousts Its Bedfellows

Early birds, says the New York Times, lured north by early spring warmth, do well to avoid cuckoos as neighbors when they start nest building.

The cuckoo mother lays its egg in the nest of some other bird and flies away without another thought for the cares of motherhood. The fledgling, newly hatched, rewards the hospitality of its hosts by shoving their eggs out of the nest and wolfing all of the food the devoted pair continue to bring to the nest.

Fresh proof of the unsocial habits of the cuckoo was brought forward at a meeting of the Linnean society in London by an English scientist. Last summer he photographed the young birds in the very act of ousting their bedfellows.

The pictures taken show that the bird slips one wing under the egg, rolls it up on his back and then slowly shoves it up to the edge of the nest and over, "like a human workman walking backward and rolling a heavy barrel up a steep incline with his shoulders."

The scientist reports that one cuckoo, only a day and a half old, threw out the same egg 15 times within the hour, it being caught and replaced each time.

Bricks Without Straw

Mrs. Finnigan labored over her washtub while Mr. Finnigan sat in the garden and gazed into space. His inactivity finally became more than Mrs. Finnigan could bear—at least, in silence.

"Why don't you come into the kitchen and help me with these clothes?" she inquired.

Mr. Finnigan turned and directed his gaze upon his wife.

"Why, Moya, can't you see I'm busy?" he drawled.

"Busy?" snapped Mrs. Finnigan. "What doin'?"

"Why, I'm thinkin', Moya!"

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

MR. AND MRS. MOUSE

"I'm sorry," said Mrs. Mouse, on her way to the wedding banquet that Mr. Mouse was giving in her honor, "that I couldn't have had my wedding gown pressed. But you know we mice don't go in for such things.

"How Fine This Cheese Is?"

"I understand, I know, neither could I," squealed Mr. Mouse. "You are beautiful enough to me," said Mr. Mouse, as he looked at her admiringly.

"But I did try in a way," she went on. "I saw a fine and fashionable mouse, and I said: "'You look very fine. Could you give me pointers on how to look my best, for I am going to my wedding banquet?'

"And this mouse told me the best way to smooth my fur and pull my whiskers nice and clean."

"Ah, you do look very lovely," said Mr. Mouse.

"'You look very handsome, too," Mrs. Mouse said to her mate.

They were beginning their wedding feast now, the banquet which Mr. Mouse had prepared for his wife.

"How fine this cheese is," Mrs. Mouse said, munching at a good-sized piece. For now, as they talked, they were nibbling as well as chatting.

"It is good cheese," agreed Mr. Mouse, "and this box of biscuits is quite tasty, too, I think."

"What made you think of such a fine banquet, and of such a wonderful place for a banquet?" asked Mrs. Mouse.

"Well, you see," said Mr. Mouse, "I knew I was very lucky, very lucky, indeed.

"Very few mice have had as great an honor as I have had. In fact I don't think any mouse ever had a more beautiful mouse bride than I have, and so I thought to myself—"'She must have the best.'

"Then I looked about me, and there were two fine driveways or runways, or crawlways, or scamperways to this window corner, and I saw the nice paper boxes of biscuits and the cheese all out—out—and lots of it!

"So I said to myself that it was the very place for a sumptuous and magnificent and glorious wedding banquet."

Mother Mouse.

"It's wonderful," said Mrs. Mouse. "Few mice, I'm sure, have had the honor to have their wedding banquet in a grocery store!"

For Mr. and Mrs. Mouse were eating in the grocery store. In the front window there was a little corner where they had settled themselves near some display boxes. The boxes hid them from the storekeeper, and when they saw people stop to look in the window they scampered back into their holes so as not to be seen.

Only one or two did see them, but they must have guessed it was their wedding banquet, for they never told on them.

So Mr. and Mrs. Mouse had all they wanted to eat, and their wedding banquet was a huge success.

In the days, and weeks, and months that followed they used to talk over their wedding feast so many, many times, and when the little mice were tiny babies they used to ask their mother over and over again:

"Mother Mouse, please tell us the story of the wedding banquet you and Daddy had in the store window."

The Game of Grumbles

Here is an amusing game to play indoors on wet days, or outdoors when it is too hot to run about:

One player starts asking questions of each in turn, just as in "Proverbs." Each must answer carefully, because if he (or she) accidentally uses an R in the reply, everyone cries—"Grumbles!" and he must drop out of the game.

Supposing the question asked were: "Do you hope for a fine day tomorrow?" the other might want to reply: "Very much"; but if she is wise she will say: "Yes, indeed." No player must use less than two words in replying.

"What would you use for sewing a button on to a black leather shoe?"

The player naturally thinks of thread first; but after a moment's reflection she is able to answer: "A needle and double black cotton."

Of course the one who is asking the questions must be wily and think out questions which may "catch" his listeners—some which can hardly be answered without letter R being used at least once. The player who is as wily as his questioner and continues until the end without "grumbling" is the winner.
